This was my first pellet rifle in over 30 years. I initially bought it because of the Ruger endorsement (many fond memories of a 10/22 as a kid), but it quickly earned its own reputation. Umarex kept the important features found on the real 10/22 - the 10 rd mag, standard 10/22 rail fit (I used a Leupold Weaver rail), the fold-down rear sight.

Ruger LCP II (image courtesy JWT for thetruthaboutguns.com) This LCP II also includes a manual safety. If you are going to choose to carry the firearm with a round in the chamber and ready to use, (which is the whole point of the thing), and if you aren't going to use a rigid holster that completely protects the trigger, then a manual safety is a must on these guns.

Final Thoughts. The FN 502's purpose seems to be a dedicated trainer for those that field an FN 509 on a frequent basis. The 22LR pistol market is somewhat saturated at the moment, despite this I have to applaud FN for attempting to break into the market in a way that will draw both existing customers and perhaps new customers into buying the product.
